SHE BRIEFING

The response to the return of SHE has been varied, but for the most part, very encouraging.

Generally speaking, for the contents we got kudos; for the printing we got brick-bats. The in-depth informative quality was especially commended, from shopping to answers to vital questions that affect our lives. Readers have also pointed out to the absence of some very obvious features. These are already in the pipeline while two are being introduced this month, namely, CAREER CHOICES and HANDY-WOMAN.

We acknowledge that printing and paper quality left much to be desired, but with greater co-operation of the printers and suppliers who control a large part of our fate, we expect this to be corrected. We are flattered by the greater expectations of our readers, and while we may not always be able to explore all the avenues of a limitless canvas, we certainly will not be wanting in matters of first priority.

We would remind our readers though, that we depend on your continued communications, criticisms, suggestions, wishes, reactions and queries to keep us afloat of the trends of your thinking. SHE does not merely inform and entertain, it also airs. . . . your views. SHE is your forum: a platform whence all may hear, as well as your sounding board.

At the same time SHE is committed to the women's cause. Some who claim to be the same, feel we do not come on strong enough. We ask you to bear with us. Consciousness has to be raised adequately first if the woman's cause is to be universally understood. And we are still on that first step. To skip it would be to leave others behind, to take them for granted.

Not that those whose thinking is already ahead will not find common ground with us. On the other hand, we feel you will discover more and the new, about other women in our multi-faceted society through us. And commonalities where you least expected to find them.

Such an area is divorce, a reality that people are reluctant to look eye to eye at, yet on which some depend for release from misery; while others, another opportunity at an elusive happiness.

Almost as taboo as a conversation-piece, except in whispers, is the second marriage. We consider it healthy to bring both out into the open.

On the brighter side, in keeping with the holiday season, are winter and party fashions that are especially fun for the end-of-the-year festivities. And while there's still money left in the till after the rash of parties and presents (for which we offer rich guidance), you may consider replenishing it with a little investment in gold (see page 68).

See you again next year. Until then, happy reading.

'SHE' MOURNS FOUR MAN-MADE WIDOWS

The world mourns with a cluster of man-made widows, orphans and saddened, bereaved kinsfolk: With Jacqueline Kennedy and the entire Kennedy clan. With Madame Nhu and her children. With Harvey Oswald's Russian wife, and their son. With the kinsfolk of the two American Police security men who died with their President.

Fittingly, there were Christians and Muslims and Jews and Buddhists in the Cathedral Choir for his funeral service. Because he wasn't of any one denomination any more: he belonged to the entire human race, a memory of human hungering for a better world.

Grief turns human eyes inward. And today, Mme Nhu may well be thinking of other widows — man-made widows — condemned to life-long mourning by the system of which she herself was a part.... We mourn with these man-made mourners. Let us pray that there will not be more.
